
—Isaiah 1:17 (NLT)
Why Advocacy?

Transformational advocacy is a challenge to ourselves and our leaders to change attitudes, behaviours, and policies that perpetuate injustice and deny God’s will for all creation to flourish.¹ Throughout Scripture, God calls people into community and sets the expectation that they care for one another. We reflect God’s love when we call on leaders to protect the most vulnerable and marginalized people in our communities. As Christians we work toward a just world in which structures and institutions give every person the opportunity to thrive.

Scripture teaches us to defend the cause of the poor. Providing direct assistance to people in need is vital, but it is also important to guard against policies that oppress, to partner with marginalized communities for long-term change, and to speak up for policies that empower all people.

The Biblical Basis for Advocacy

Jesus was compassionate to all people, especially the widow, the orphan, the stranger, the hungry, the poor, and the sick—the most vulnerable in society. Jesus loved all people—rich and poor—and actively cared for people in need. He urged his disciples to do the same.

As Christians we strive to show God’s reconciling love at all times and in all places. God often speaks of our purpose to rebuild, restore, and renew all that is broken (Isaiah 61). We are called to work to end the brokenness in our communities, in our nation and in the world as a whole.

God loves justice (Isaiah 61:8; Psalm 33:5; 99:4) and requires us to do justice, love kindness, and walk humbly with God (Micah 6:8; Amos 5:22-24). Our individual actions and societal structures should enable all people to share in what God has provided.

The Bible contains inspiring examples of advocates. People such as Esther and Moses spoke alongside marginalized and oppressed people who were greatly affected by decisions made by people in power.
After fasting in the desert, Jesus went on to both directly serve and advocate for impoverished and marginalized people in his public ministry. In the same way Jesus’ followers, in response to their relationship with God, are called to serve as advocates for systemic change. Standing with marginalized groups and advocating for a more just social order is an integral part of direct ministry. Jesus’ teaching and example point us to the command “Love your neighbour as yourself” (Leviticus 19:18; Matthew 22:39), which calls us to extend our compassion to neighbours throughout the world. Charity helps individuals survive during emergencies or even while in an oppressive system. However, justice demands that we support people to increase their resilience and to ally with them to eliminate injustices, removing the need for charity, and ensuring that all people have the opportunity to thrive. Jesus warned that the nations will be held accountable and judged for the ways they have treated people who are marginalized. We steward our power by speaking and serving with strength (1 Peter 4:10-11).

The Bible also emphasizes the role and responsibility of leaders—and of believers in general—to care for the poor, the stranger, and the oppressed (Psalm 72; Exodus 22:21-23; Romans 13). Scripture suggests that our leaders should work for the good and well-being of all, whether or not they acknowledge that their authority comes from God. Christians can advocate for their government to protect and provide for all its people just as Paul exercised his power and privilege as a Roman citizen (Acts 21-26).

It can also be common for social justice advocates to appeal to Proverbs 31:8-9—the voice for the voiceless passage. An Indigenous leader once confronted church leaders who wanted to take part in Indigenous justice work. Using an appeal to this passage, he said to them, With respect, I’m not voiceless; you are deaf. Voicelessness is rare and justice advocates must take the time to listen before acting. Listening includes a commitment to working directly with people who experience injustice in order to confront the injustice together.
Part of an elected official’s job is to listen to constituents. Because of this, Members of Parliament and provincial legislatures will welcome perspectives and input from you. Without feedback from constituents and from organizations that work directly with marginalized groups, officials may not modify their views or take action on a specific issue.

Canadian Foodgrains Bank cites significant changes to public policies with the help of Canadians voicing their concerns to elected officials. For example, advocacy resulted in the removal of a policy requiring food aid to be shipped from Canada. Millions of dollars in shipping costs have been saved since this policy change in 2008, enabling timelier and more flexible delivery of food assistance, while supporting local food economies. Voices of farm groups, supporters and churches made this possible. More recently, advocacy efforts focused on global climate financing commitments have led to a measurable improvement in Canada’s global commitments. Since 2013, Canada has doubled its support for developing countries to deal with climate change, and increased the proportion going to adaptation. Though still behind on its fair share, Canada is more likely to reach its target with public support.

In our Christian faith we speak about stewarding time and money; part of stewardship is knowing that what we are doing is effective. Knowing that our elected officials listen when we use our voices to encourage change should empower us to lift our voices and advocate.
How to Advocate

Meet
An in-person meeting with your Member of Parliament or your member’s staff is the most effective way to advocate and have an impact as a constituent. You can find your Member of Parliament online at ourcommons.ca/members.

Use the search box at the top of this webpage to search for your Member by name or using your postal code. From there, click on your Member to access their page and then click the contact tab to access their constituency information. You can request a meeting via phone or email. Elected representatives get many requests for meetings. Your request can stand out if you follow up your first call or e-mail with a second call to politely remind the staff of your meeting request.

In your meeting request, you should specify available dates, your desired location, a list of participants, and the subject of your meeting. Focusing on one issue in your meeting will be most effective.

Before the meeting, prepare by doing research on your Member’s voting record and position on the issue you wish to discuss. You can search for your Member’s voting record and see which legislation they have supported by searching for your Member at ourcommons.ca/members, clicking on your Member, and then clicking on the “work” tab. Many MP websites also profile the issues they are concerned about. It is helpful to do additional research if necessary in order to answer any questions your member may have about your specific topic or request.

At the end of an in-person meeting, you should give your Member or staff person a one-page brief. This will ensure that the office has a record of your meeting, a way to follow up with you, and a clear request. The brief should include:

- Your name, title, any affiliation you have.
- A clear summary of the action you are calling your Member to take following your meeting. (The action could include supporting or opposing a specific bill, making proactive suggestions for amendments, or supporting future actions on an issue.)
- A brief relevant background of the issue and list of reasons in support of your call to action (add evidence and stories to back up your position, resonate with shared values).
- A restatement of your call to action and recommendations at the end. It is most effective if the request is achievable and realistic for your Member and if it has a requested time frame in which it should be accomplished.
- Your contact information and any relevant history or connection you or your group has had with the issue.

When meeting with your MP, it is most effective to engage in dialogue and have a conversation rather than taking a confrontational approach. This can allow you to create a relationship with your Member, which can be very valuable in terms of accomplishing your requested action and building a long-term conversation about the issues you care about.

During the meeting you should be prepared to negotiate a bit in terms of your request. You will be more successful if you know what you need to stand firm on and what aspects you can be flexible with.

These meetings provide a great opportunity for you also to give back to your MP in terms of constituency interaction and education. You will be most effective if you can relate your request back to your constituency and local context. You could share what you learned from the MP meeting in a prayer request or in a small group at church.

It is also effective—and courteous—to send a thank-you note or email after a meeting, as a way for your meeting and request to be remembered and to stand out.

Write

Beyond the in-person meeting, studies show that handwritten, mailed letters, and personalized emails serve as the best ways to communicate with your Member of Parliament. You should make a clear request in only one or two paragraphs; your letter does not need to be lengthy to be powerful.
Emails and mailing addresses for Members of Parliament can be found on ourcommons.ca/members, by searching their name, and then clicking on the contact tab. Email is the fastest way to contact your legislator, other than calling. This is recommended if the subject of your message is time sensitive.

You can also mail a handwritten letter to your Member of Parliament. You do not need to pay for postage when writing your Member’s Parliamentary Address (House of Commons, Ottawa, Ontario K1A 0A6).

Tips for writing to your MP:

- State your request in the first sentence. Your request should be specific, achievable, and time bound.
- Introduce yourself and explain your connection to the issue or your credentials.
- Give background and support for your request.
- List other supporters of your request and connect your request to your constituency.

When writing or calling, be sure to identify yourself as a constituent. You can do this by providing your postal code and address.

Attend

Many Members hold town hall meetings, fundraisers, debates, or other events. These can be effective events to attend in order to create a relationship with your MP and their staff. Town hall meetings and other events also provide important personal opportunities for you to become more involved in your local political context.
Town halls give you a chance to ask your Member a question in the public sphere. This can be an effective way to raise public awareness about your issue and a way to hold your Member publicly accountable. You should realize, however, that this does put your Member on the spot. Asking your question in an open and friendly way can be more effective than posing a question that is accusatory or condemning.

Call
An effective and fast way to contact your Member of Parliament is by calling their office. You can find your Member of Parliament’s phone number on their contact tab by searching their name on ourcommons.ca/members.

The call will likely be answered by an office assistant in your member’s office. You can tell this person that you are a constituent and that you would like to leave a message for your MP. Then clearly state the message you would like your Member to receive, whether it is in support of or in opposition to a specific bill, or it is a request to take a specific action.

You can also ask to speak to a staff person who works on the specific issue about which you are calling. You can say, for example, “I am a constituent; could I please speak with the staff person who works on Indigenous issues?” If you are not able to speak with a staff person, you can still leave your message with the office assistant. Either method is a sure way to get your message to your MP.

Offices track calls and messages. Your call can have a real impact on your Member’s position on an issue.

Post
Social media is another great way to use your voice to promote change. You can use Facebook, Twitter, your blog, Instagram, and other social media tools to create awareness among your friends and invite them to join in advocating for just policies and systems. You can also use social media to communicate with your Member on issues you are passionate about. To find your Member’s social media information, visit their websites and search for official links to the platforms they use. There are several ways to communicate with your MP:

- Facebook: Find your Member’s Facebook page and write on their wall or tag them in your posts about an issue. Following your legislators on Facebook is also a way you can stay informed about what issues they are voting on.
• Twitter: Find your Member on Twitter. Find their handle and tweet at him/her. If you want to message your Member privately you can do so through the messages tab. You can also find hashtags that relate to the issue you are talking about and add them to your post to add your voice to the general Twitter conversation around that hashtag.

• Instagram: Follow your Member on Instagram to see photos and videos related to issues they are involved in. Tag them in your own relevant posts and stories to share your ideas and calls to action.

• Blog: Share your thoughts on an issue on your blog and send policymakers the link.

Action Alerts
For up to date content on current legislation subscribe to Action Alerts at crcna.org/PublicDialogue/action-centre These alerts make it easy for you to contact your Member with a pre-written email containing recommendations on current policy. Fill in your information, personalize the letter if you’d like, and press send. It’s that easy to take action on important issues!

Partner
You can also partner with advocacy organizations to help in communicating with your Member of Parliament. You can ask for their help in arranging a meeting, with talking points, and with advocacy tips. You can also let them know what advocacy initiatives you have undertaken. Organizations are eager to hear stories of community members becoming involved in advocacy.
We recommend you contact the following organizations:

- the Canadian Foodgrains Bank — foodgrainsbank.ca
- the Office of Social Justice — crcna.org/justice
- World Renew — worldrenew.ca
- KAIROS — kairoscanada.org/
- Citizens for Public Justice — cpj.ca/

Listen and Build

You don’t have to advocate alone. As you partner with agencies and connect with your MP, look for opportunities to invite others from your community to join you. If you have a friendship with someone who is affected by the specific issue you are working on, you could invite that person to join you and play a leading role in the advocacy process.

Tips for Effective Advocacy

- In all communication with your representatives, be sure to include your postal address, with a postal code, as well as your email address. Your postal address helps show that you are a constituent.
- Personalize your message. A personal and thoughtful letter is much more effective than a generic letter.
- Be informative. Explain why the issue is important, and include your personal experience, stories, and knowledge.
- Be respectful and constructive. Governing is challenging, and elected representatives get plenty of loud criticism. Come prepared to listen and to suggest alternatives that leaders can use.
- Be concise. Your meeting, letter, or message does not need to be long to make a difference. You can state your request clearly in two paragraphs or in a few main points.
- Request specific action. Give the name of legislation or specific bill numbers that correspond with your request. Remember also to give your Member of Parliament a one-page brief that includes your request. Be sure also to follow up if you called or sent a letter, or to say thank-you after a meeting.
